Colin Barnett says climate change is a big deal Published November 3, 2013 By DOUG HUNT QUEENSLAND Premier Campbell Newman has reiterated his belief that climate change is a big deal, but has stopped short of trying to change the global carbon market when he appears before the United Nations. Mr Newman, who has gone to the UN Environment Programme (UNEP) Climate Summit in Nairobi, Kenya, said it was important to take the lessons of the Kyoto Protocol on climate change because, in the end, governments would have to deal with it. The UNEP summit is just five days before what is billed as the biggest global climate change summit on December 4 and 5 in Copenhagen. The conference, chaired by UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon, is being attended by nearly 200 countries including Australia. Last month, the G20 leaders pledged to step up efforts to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Mr Newman said he had gone to Nairobi with the express purpose of dealing with climate change, before going on to make a brief address to the summit. In a speech to the international climate change conference in Nairobi, Mr Newman reiterated his strong belief that global warming was a serious problem. "I know there is the rhetoric from people on the left and the right about how the world is not responsible for the carbon in the atmosphere. "Well I agree with that. We are not responsible for what goes into the atmosphere, but we are responsible for how we use what is there. "And that's

To ensure proteasome-mediated degradation of ubiquitin-modified proteins, the ubiquitin-editing enzyme A20 restricts the generation of free ubiquitin chains on cellular proteins. Here, we describe a strategy for generating high levels of A20 in mammalian cells. This approach is based on the generation of a cell line that stably expresses an A20 transgene under the control of a CMV promoter, providing tight, constitutive expression of the human protein. This constitutive expression of A20 enabled the inhibition of NF-kappaB transcriptional activity in response to TNFalpha and subsequent analysis of the effects of A20 on ubiquitin-conjugated proteins. Our results demonstrate that transfected A20 was able to decrease the expression of the NF-kappaB target gene E-selectin, and prevented the degradation of the c-Rel protein, whereas recruitment of c-Rel to target promoter DNA was not affected. Expression of A20 in the CMV-A20 cell line was still able to reduce TNFalpha-induced NF-kappaB activity. However, the level of constitutive NF-kappaB activity in the CMV-A20 cell line was higher than that seen in cells expressing a comparable level of endogenous A20, suggesting that transgenic expression of
